EDUCATION IN GREENSBORO

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY -

From the early days in Greensboro education has held a high priority. In the summer of 1794 in Aaron Shepard's barn was gathered the first school ever taught in Greensboro. The barn referred to appears to be in the vicinity of the block house near the Bliss-Sleeper Monument. The teacher was Miss Anna Hill, who also taught the following summer in the barn of Ashbel Shepard. In the same place soon after, Miss Emma Stoddard taught a school. The third teacher employed in town was Miss Jane Johnson who occupied the first school house in Greensboro. This school, which stood on the eminence between Mr. O. W. Ellsworth's and Mr. Josiah Hale's, was later destroyed by fire. From these small beginnings the number of schools has multiplied, so that instead of one or two we now have fifteen districts in most of which are schools both summer and winter. Families met in school houses in the 1800's for worship until churches were built. Mention is made of meetings sometimes at the north school house and sometimes at the south. The first meeting house built in town was erected by the community according to Aug. 26, 1827 records a request was made for Pastor Bayley to preach the dedication sermon. (The above was found in the History of Greensboro Congregational Church publication - Nov. 24, 1854 by Rev. James P. Stone.)

In the history of the Church of Christ, Greensboro, Vermont, 1804-1854 we read, "On June 25, 1817 the combined schools (6) held a exhibition at the south school house, the home of the original school which was situated at the fork of the road a little south of Greensboro village.

In researching records for a history of education in Greensboro schools we find a sincere concern for provisions for all youth's opportunity. Greensboro Town Records were destroyed by fire on Aug. 9, 1831. It has been only during the twentieth century that comprehensive records were kept and only the past few years that a real picture is available. Town system of organization became compulsory with 3-6 school directors in 1892 and organization of Jr. High Schools in 1915. These were provided by legislature.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY -

Early in the 20th century there were 11 schools for grades 1-8. At Greensboro Bend were two rooms with one teacher for grades 1-4 and one for 5-8. All students who planned for a formal education beyond grade 8 were responsible for their own. The rural schools, grade 1-8 were: Speir district, North Greensboro, Four Corners, Campbell district #1 at the head of Caspian Lake, the James Black district, Logan School near Mitchell farm, the Young district on hill by Sam Rich place, Lumsden district (which included the Barr Hill area); Greensboro Bend-a 2 story 2 room school and the Greensboro Village one room school. This building, on a lot across from Mildred Willey's, is now the Greensboro Fire Station moved to the center of the village. As the village school enrollment became large, at times between 30 and 40 pupils, it became necessary to consider planning for new and larger facilities. After several meetings in the town hall, now the Grange Hall, it was voted to build. Since the town hall was becoming too small for a town meeting, at which only men could vote, it was voted to build a school with a town hall and auditorium on the second floor. The school opened in 2 rooms on the East side in 1913. Miss Lillian Thorton, who became the wife of Dr. Albert Kinney, taught grades 1-4; and Miss Maude Bailey, grades 5-8. Mrs. Myra (Fred) Chase who had taught in the old village school was the superintendent. It was four years later in 1917 that the other side of the first floor was opened for the first year of high school. On June 25, 1919, eleven students graduated from the second year of high school. Only one member, Lester Hill, continued to finish his junior year at Greensboro. The first four year graduating class of four students was in 1922 and the last was in 1968. Of the 46 graduating classes the largest was 15 in 1941, and the smallest was 2 in 1925 with the average of 8.

The curriculum for the opening of the high school was basically college preparatory with little choice of courses. Agriculture and Home Economics as provided by the Smith-Hughs Act were offered to grades 7&8, as were Latin and French since the first two years of high school enrollment then were not considered an ample teaching load. The three teachers, one of whom was a full time "teaching principal" also carried on activities after school hours and weekends. There were no "special teachers" for music, art and the other so-called "frills", nor were there coffee breaks and teachers rooms. Activities including baseball, basketball, drama, debating and several school parties, skits and dances. Basketball games "away" were on Friday nights and in winter travel was on a big sled as a hay ride, or on the St. J. & L.C.. State tournaments were a thing of the future.

Vacations, especially "sugaring vacation" was entirely dependent upon the "mud season" and was at one time a duration of six weeks. School closed that year on June 26. This gave little time to get statistics finalized for report to the state by July 1. The high school was to "keep" 36 weeks, while the grade schools were required to "keep" 34 weeks. One year there were 10 elementary schools, but only 8 were "legal". "Keep" was a rather loose term and the demands on the running of each school were much less stringent than today. The local districts in their pride were not about to be told the "what, when and why" by the state and/or federal bureaucracy even if it meant sacrifice of those funds that were available by conforming. Although Greensboro never lost pride in its ability to operate good schools, the pressures and burdens of financing increased and gradually state and federal programs and assistance made their way into the system. The high school did not just happen, even though there was building area across from the elementary rooms. The pros and cons were "hotly" argued. Had not some of those who now wanted the high school found an excellent education at schools like Craftsbury Academy a private boarding school? The answer was "yes" -very few attended school beyond grade 8, and many would not be able to be away for the week from farm chores nor could they afford the expense. At this time less than 10% of students continued beyond the grades. The opening of Greensboro High School saw many boys and girls attend at least a year or more. Students came by horseback or drove a horse or pony (sleds in winter) and hitched them in the church sheds near the school. School teams, rather than buses, were the thing of the day. Some of the rigs had canvas covers and a "spill or tip-over" was an occasional exciting, if not uncomfortable experience.

School opened at 9:00 with lunch hour 12:00-1:00 (sometimes 12:30). School closed at four unless the work of the day was unfinished and closing then could mean 4:15 or even 4:30.

Graduates of Greensboro High School owe a debt of gratitude to the citizens of the community, the school board members whose insight and perservance allowed them the stamina to follow through to that first graduation in 1922. Just half a century ago there were 174 pupils in grades 1-8 at a cost per pupil of $82.00 and in 1968, the last year of GHS, there were 130 pupils in grades 1-8 at a cost of $770.00 per pupil. (Part of the $770.00 was taxes for building the new Hazen Union High School and a part of this was reimbursed by the state and federal.)

What price progress.

GREENSBORO ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

"A group of Greensboro High School graduates met at Lakeview House on June 16, 1925 and had supper with Mrs. Blair in the dining room. Following the supper, the group spent half the night making out a constitution. All the alumni plus Evelyn DeBrune and Robert Wilson, who graduated that year, 1925, were invited. They were John Heidger, Nina Lumsden, Frederic Lapierre, and Ethel Young from the class of 1922. From the class of 1923, which was my first class, were William Hill, Gretta Atherton, Herman Willey, Guy Mathews, Cordelia Rodgers, Clara Olmstead, Harold St. Louis, and Arthur Drown. From the class of 1924 were George Colby, Delia Olmstead, Isabella Marshall, Clara Hill, and Lloyd Goodrich.

For a number of years we (Mr. and Mrs. Bole) attended the reunions. I was speaker several times and enjoyed visiting at Robert and Gertrude Willey's when we were at the meetings."

The above comments were made by Lyman W. Bole on June 14, 1976 at the Rutland Hospital prior to his death there on June 19. His son-in-law, Clarence Amsden '27, transcribed same; and sent them to Evelyn D. Springstead, President of GHS Alumni Association, to be included in this publication. Mr. Bole was the 'principal' and 'principle' organizer of the association. He passed away at 6:00 P.M. as members were gathered at the Saint Michael's Parish Hall for the 51st banquet and were signing a "get well card" which was delivered to the family. This gesture was gratefully accepted and appreciated.

Mention was made of speaking on several occasions to the Alumni groups and notes of a speech presented at the 25th anniversary, June 14, 1950, by Mr. Bole were sent by Clarence and Helen Reed Amsden. A few excerpts from those notes bring back fond memories and images of our former principal. "Found some pictures which reminded me of those years a quarter century ago. Some of you will remember a tall skinny young man who came here to teach the school in 1922. Sam Ladd and Bert Willey had a 'doubtful look'. Mabel Blair took me in. (Mabel Blair ran a boarding house, the Lakeview Inn)." Mr. Bole was a minister's son, and as he often said "poor as a church mouse". He first appeared in his army coat and hat, and strode up the street with a measured walk, not always allowing himself ample time from his boarding house to school. Some of us had courage to ring the bell as he approached the building. He was most understanding and quietly appreciative of our "thirst for knowledge and enthusiasm to get at the labors of the day".

In the concluding notes of his June 14 '50 speech, Mr. Bole admonishes us "to take advantage of our constitutional rights and privileges; to be satisfied with nothing short of the best our town can really afford for schools; and if necessary - be willing to sacrifice some local sovereignty in the interests of better education for all".
